

Make your own stop

The site has 41 stops. Pick a place and a problem it does not have yet, research it the way the site does, and present it in the same shape. Every number needs a named source.

Place, country

The problem, in one word

You arrive... (two sentences that put the reader there)

The one number that stops you

what it is, and the source with a date

The story behind it (two short paragraphs, each fact with a source)

What is working (real progress, with figures and years)

Who is working on it (one organisation, what it does)

Someone who lives here

The site never invents a real person. Either find a real account (an interview, a report, a charity's own story, with permission and a source) or write a clearly labelled composite built only from what your sources say about life there. Say which one you did.

Real account (source) or composite? Circle one.

Name, age, what they do

One thing they say, in their own voice

Their story (two paragraphs, first person)

What they would tell you

Sources (organisation, month, year, what each one gave you)
